Horschel, a 5-11 junior from Grant, Fla., launched his second drive 329 yards with no wind in sight. Louisville's Derek Fathauer cam in second with a 320-yard drive, edging out Clemson's Kyle Stanley and Georgia State's Joel Sjoholm, who both finished with a 319-yard drives.

In the PING Putting Contest, Nagy edged out four others in a five-man playoff that featured UNLV's Jarred Texter, Vanderbilt's Jon Curran, Florida State's Matt Savage, and East Tennessee State's Gareth Shaw. All five finished with a round of 23 on the nine-hole putting course that featured a western motif of hay bails, saddles, boots and horseshoes as obstacles for the competitors. Nagy birdied the playoff hole to edge out the field.
